

The Department of Engineering and Society (E&S) in the School of Engineering and Applied Science at the University of Virginia seeks applicants for non-tenure track Assistant Professor positions. Academic general faculty members provide important academic service to the University community, focusing on teaching as well as research (See <https://uvapolicy.virginia.edu/policy/PROV-004>). Service to the department is also expected.

These positions involve teaching three courses per semester as part of the Science, Technology, and Society Program in the School of Engineering and Applied Sciences. The primary responsibility of the STS Program is to teach STS, ethics, and communication to undergraduate engineering students.

Applicants must hold a Ph.D. in STS or a closely related field. Candidates with research and teaching interests in the following areas will be preferred: macro and micro ethics and values; social justice aspects of technology; sustainability; and cyber technologies and data, and those who have an interest in the implications of STS for engineering practice, or ethics for engineering professionals. Also preferred are candidates with a record of teaching excellence.

These positions will begin ideally with the spring semester, in January, 2023 and will involve teaching three sections of ethics or a combination of ethics and the STS 4500-4600 undergraduate thesis course. The salary will be commensurate with experience and will include fringe benefits. UVA is proud to have a strong culture of collaboration and collegiality and is committed to creating collaborative and diverse environments necessary to solve the next generation of research challenges.
